In the morning

Barrio Santa Cruz

A treasure behind every corner.

The present-day districts of Santa Cruz, Santa María la Blanca and San Bartolomé make up what was once the old Jewish quarter of Seville. Vestiges of bygone times can still be found in its narrow streets, small squares and passages.

There is no doubt that the Callejón del Agua is a must-see street on your tour of the labyrinthine Santa Cruz quarter.

Next to the city wall, and parallel to the gardens of the Real Alcázar, this street was used to carry water from the Caños de Carmona to the Reales Alcázares. Hence its current name.
